Case #11927-X

AGE: No Info. NATIONALITY: No Info. SEX: No Info.

Preliminary Survey:

Due to the lack of background informational data, only highly tentative summarizing statements can be made.

Summarizing Statements:

The writer could be a Russian male (perhaps Ukranian) in his forties. He seems to be a person with good innate capacities which he does not use constructively, due to a considerable emotional instability. He possesses a good intelligence, is fairly well educated (possibly college) and has adequately absorbed the material he has read and studied. While his mental faculties are well developed, his materialistic tendencies and inclinations are more pronounced, and there is a lack of proper coordination between his intellectual and practical spheres. He seems to be a sort of a busybody who tries his hand at a number of things and who gets involved in a variety of undertakings, none of them probably very sound and stable. He may have started, originally, in some kind of a professional carrer and then somehow or other has gotten off the track. He may surprise by some astute observations, but he may not function consistently in this respect. At some other time, he may distort or even falsify the things he sees and hears. It should be very difficult to pin him down in any way. He can figure and calculate and is very skillful in manipulating numbers which are foremost on his mind. He may try to get financial advantages by various means and whenever he perceives a change. He is resourceful and has a number of ideas, some of them rather peculiar and not quite fit for materialization. He may plan and project rather strange schemes and machinations, possibly of shady character. He is an adventurer and opportunist who may convey a more innocuous impression than would be warranted. Intermittently, he is able to think logically; but in general his way of thinking is rather unclear and confused, especially when personal emotional issues are involved. Besides, there are great changes in the mode of his performance. When he so desires, he can be quite accurate and conscientious in the execution of his tasks; but when he is not properly directed, there is always some distortion in the way he tackles a job. He has difficulties in keeping things in proper order and proper perspective. His originally good ability for concentration and his well functioning memory are also affected by emotional interferences.

Emotionally, the writer is so unbalanced that he may have difficulties in affecting an adequate social adjustment. He tries to keep his feelings and impulses under a strict rational control, which intermittently is punctured. He is a restless, erratic and unpredictable individual who may play a number of different roles, depending on the external circumstances. He is ego-centered and selfish and most concerned with his personal advantage. He is detached and in some respects even dissociated, and he only has a minimum of feeling for social demands. There is almost a split in his personality makeup between his overstimulated, extraverted activities and his rigid, almost paralyzed emotionality. The latter does not give meaningful support to his general functioning. He has a psychopathic personality which apparently is not sufficiently disturbed for institutionalizing. However, he may do rather bizarre and possibly questionable things. His self-defensive and self-protective mechanisms are strongly developed, and he knows instinctively how to get himself out of tight situations. He may pretend to be guided by an ideological system with its fundamental ethical principles and occasionally make a show of how strictly he adheres to them. In reality he possesses a considerable number of camouflaging capacities which he exercises rather cleverly and cunningly. He seems to live in a state of constant deception. He can fabricate stories, embroider, distort and falsify facts and he has a great facility for throwing dust into people's eyes. He is unsympathetic, callous and without scruples. For proper financial remuneration, he may execute assignments of doubtful nature which the average person would be afraid to touch. There is a lot of aggression within him which is not properly integrated in his personality. His instinctual sphere is evidently also disturbed, although not to the same degree as his emotional one. There is the possibility that he has some homosexual inclinations. His originally ample reservoir of psycho-physical resources is considerably drained by his strong tensions and complexities, but he apparently has sufficient strength and energy at his disposal, at present, to support his various activities. Nevertheless, he is vulnerable in regard to his mental health and his social position is precarious.

Summary:

The writer's innate capabilities are evidently utilized in a distorted manner, due to a serious emotional disturbance. He is an antisocial individual of rather questionable integrity.
